Are Storage Containers and Shipping Containers Different Sizes? The terms "storage containers" and "shipping containers" are often used interchangeably, but there can be differences in their sizes and specifications. Typically, shipping containers are standardized for transport purposes, commonly available in 20-foot and 40-foot lengths.

Containers for Storage. When it comes to storage containers, regulations are less strict. They do need to be in decent condition and able to protect goods, however, they can be constructed from lighter materials and aren't limited to preset sizes and dimensions. Usually, storage containers are old and refurbished shipping containers.
